ORDER Your Tickets Now for 2006-2007

* BEETHOVEN BUZZ I
Sunday, September 24, 2006 - 3:00
Piano Concerto No. 1 in C, Opus 15
Piano Concerto No. 2 in G, Opus 19
Piano Concerto No. 5 in E-flat, Opus 73
(“Emperor”)
Mark Salman, piano

* BEETHOVEN BUZZ II
Sunday, October 15, 2006 - 3:00 p.m.
Piano Concerto No. 3 in c minor, Opus 57
Piano Concerto No. 4 in G, Opus 58
Choral Fantasia, Opus 80
Mark Salman, piano

* BACH CANTATAS
Sunday, November 5, 2006 - 3:00
Eia feste Burg unser Gott, BWV 80
Nach dir, Herr, verlanget mich, BWV 150
Aue der Tiefe rufe ich zu dir, BWV 131
Aue tiefer Not schrei ich zu dir, BWV 38
Sinfonia from Wir danken dir Gott, wir danken dir, BWV 29

* MESSIAH
Sunday, December 3, 2006 - 3:00
Handel:
Messiah

* HOLIDAY
Monday, December 18, 2006 - 7:30 - Meany Hall
Johann Sebastian Bach:
Magdecutta, BWV 243
Robert Kochley:
Holiday arrangements
Family sing-along

* WINTER BAROQUE
Saturday, February 4, 2007 - 3:00
Franz Joseph Haydn:
Symphony No. 45 in F-sharp minor (“Farewell”)
George Friderich Handel:
Organ Concerto in G minor
Antonio Vivaldi:
Choral Work TBA
Bryan Johanson:
Guitar Concerto [World premiere]
Michael Pattrington, guitar

ALL CONCERTS ARE AT FIRST FREE METHODIST CHURCH, EXCEPT “HOLIDAY.”
FOR MORE INFORMATION, CALL 206-682-5208 OR VISIT OUR WEB SITE, WWW.OSSCS.ORG.

MARK SALMAN, PIANIST
Hailed as a “heroic virtuoso,” Mark Salman’s performances have been described as “powerful,” “astonishing, exacting and evocative,” “dramatic,” “wildly imaginative” and “touchingly lyrical.” Of his performance of Beethoven’s Hammerklavier sonata one authority stated, “there are probably only five or six pianists in the world who can play it as perfectly.”

Mark’s Salman’s performances have taken him to Europe, Asia, Canada and throughout the United States. He has performed in Carnegie Hall and Alice Tully Hall in New York City, has been the subject of profiles in The New York Times and has been featured in numerous radio and television broadcasts in the U.S. and in China. His account of his meetings with and playing for Vladimir Horowitz appears in David Dubal’s book, Evenings with Horowitz. Mr. Salman is a co-founder of the Delmarva Piano Festival in Rehoboth Beach, Delaware, which recently completed its fourteen season. Recent performances have included his debut at the Newport Music Festival in Newport, Rhode Island, an eight recital series devoted to the works of Franz Liszt, and three recitals featuring Schubert’s final three sonatas this past season. Mr. Salman is a Steinway artist.

Besides his wide-ranging repertoire, Mr. Salman is perhaps best known for his expertise on Beethoven, having performed the complete cycle of the thirty-two piano sonatas on both coasts as well as in 18 broadcasts on KING-FM in Seattle. Currently in production is Beethoven and his 32 Piano Sonatas – A Musical Universe, a sixteen-part video series featuring Mr. Salman’s performances of the complete sonata cycle, hosted by the noted author and commentator, David Dubal. DVD volumes one and two and have recently been released on the Great Composers label, www.greatcomposers.us.

Mr. Salman’s recordings include The Transcendental Piano, featuring works by Alkan, Beethoven and Liszt on Titanic Records, Mozart’s Piano Concerto K. 488 and K. 593, with the Northwest Sinfonietta conducted by Christophe Cladur on the IMMortals Classics label, an all-Chopin CD on Great Composers, as well as American Intervene, featuring contemporary American works for cello and piano on Ambassador Records. Soon to be released is the first disc in Mr. Salman’s Beethoven cycle, featuring the Moonlight, Op. 2, No. 1 and Op.101 sonatas.

Mr. Salman is a native of Connecticut, where he began his studies at the age of eight and made his recital debut at eleven. A graduate of The Juilliard School, he studied with Richard Faber and Josef Raifsky. He previously attended the Massachusetts Institute of Technology for two years, where he concentrated on chamber music and composition, studying with the noted composer, John Harbison.

ORCHESTRA SEATTLE

VIOLIN
Susanna Carpenter
Susanne Herring
Lauren Doughty
Stacey Dye (9/24)
Stephanie Bell (9/24)
Stephen Hagg (10/15)
Suzanne Herring (10/15)
Jason Hershwy
Menchung Ho
Maria Hunts (9/24)
Fritz Klein (*9/24)/10/15
Pam Karmiol (9/24)
Mark Lutz (10/15)
Arvok Maitzke
Gregor Nitsche
(10/15)
Suwan Oren
Stephen Provine
*9/24) (9/24)
Betsy Robertson (9/24)
Theo Schaad
Jean Smithov (9/24)
Kena Smith
Shangrill (9/24)
Nicole Tsong (9/24)

VIOLA
BrigitteDolf (9/24)
Deborah Dout
Audrey Don
Dawn Juliano (9/24)
Jim Luis
Katherine
McWilliams
Hakan Olsman (10/15)
Andrew Schimler (*10/15)
Julie Reddy (*9/24)

CELLO
Julie Reddy (*9/24)
Annie Roberts
Valerie Ross
Katie Sauter Missick
Karen Thomsen
Matthew Wynn (*10/15)

BASS
Jo Hassan
Steve Mccleary
Kevin McCarthy
Chris Simon (*10/15)
Shari Miller (*10/15)

TRUMPET
David Cole
Rabi Lahir

TIMPANI
Dan Oie

ORCHESTRA SEATTLE CHAMBER SINGERS

GEOGE SHANGROW, MUSIC DIRECTOR

SOPRANO
Sue Cobb
Kyla Deremer
Susan Dier
Dana Dufaro
Cinda Fricke
Kiki Hood
Lorette Knowles
Kaye Kofford
Jill Krakko
Peggy Kurtz
Jana Marlow
Lila Woodroof May

ALTO
Sharon Agnew
Carlos Cross Avery
Jane Blackwell
Carol Burleson
Ann Erickson
Courtney Fuller
Ellen Kaisde
Jean Marie Kent
Theodore Leta
Suzi Means
Laurie Medill
Christine Rickett
Julia Alkaya Thiel
Anne Thompson
Zinna Zimmerman

BAROQUE
Stephen Brady
Andrew Damichik
Douglas Dufaro
Marc Fittchett
Larry Maloney
Paddy McDonald
Deniss Moore
Michael Scannel
Jeff Thirlaway
Richard Wyckoff
whole second movement, finally burst out in a joyful, indeed almost raucous explosion a minute or so into the last movement, the effect is like stepping out into brilliant sunshine after spending a long and contemplative time deep in the woods, or perhaps even in a cave or underground. There is a tradition, dating back to the time of Liszt, which associates the slow movement with the myth of Orpheus taming the Furies. Whether or not there is actual substance to this, I can think of very few pages in music that come so close to articulating speech, or that so movingly reenact the power of humility and gentleness to melt the hardened and angry heart, as do those of the central movement of the G major Concerto. It is not the conquering hero but the still, small voice that wins the battle in this work.

The last movement, which for a long time now has been known by the sobriquet "Emperor," is one of the best known and best loved works in the literature. At one time, I remember reading somewhere, there were more recordings of this piece in the catalog than any other piece of classical music. There is, of course, a danger to any work of art when it becomes so familiar that we lose sight of how remarkable and pathbreaking it is. This can certainly be said of many of Beethoven’s most famous works, and the Fifth Concerto, like the fourth, benefits particularly from being heard in close proximity to its four siblings, particularly its immediate predecessor, from which it is so utterly different that someone who didn’t know Beethoven’s music well might think it by another man altogether.

It is rather amazing that the journey from the earliest of the concertos (and remember that the one we call no. 2 was actually composed before no. 1, but was published later and thus bears the later number) to the last of them took only about fifteen years, and that in the process of that journey the scope, sound and in some ways the very nature of the concerto form would be changed forever. At nearly forty minutes, the Fifth concerto is substantially longer than any concerto written previously, and longer than any that would be written until those of Brahms. Not merely length but also style and tone, and, of course, the orchestration, make this the prototype of the "symphonic" concerto. Like the orchestral expositions Brahms concertos, the grand orchestral exposition that follows the soloist’s opening cadenza/dialogue with the orchestra feels almost like a symphony, and I believe that was in fact, in part, the intention. It is both interesting and historically significant that in this piece, for the first time in the history of the form, Beethoven expressly forbids the introduction of a cadenza by the performer at the traditional moment towards the end of the first movement, writing in fearsome Italian, "Non si fa una cadenza, m’attacca subito il seguente." (Do not play a cadenza, but rather immediately play the following passage!) At this very moment, when might expect a huge and grand improvisation to match the enormous scale of the first movement, Beethoven writes instead a brief but hair-raising cadenza-like passage that leads seamlessly into a passage with perfect naturalness traverses an emotional landscape ranging from icy and remote to meltingly warm and Romantic, and, finally thrillingly triumphant.

Beethoven often manages to create monuments out of the smallest building blocks, but rarely so impressively as he does in the first movement of this work.

If the master could be accused of displaying a bit of machismo in the first movement of the Fifth, nowhere in all his music does he show greater tenderness than in the second movement, perhaps a cross between a nocturne and a hymn, which to my ear prefigures both Chopin and Brahms. Yet another significant step towards the Romantic concerto, Beethoven chooses (as he does often in later works, and as Mendelssohn, Schumann and Liszt would imitate) to link the final two movements with a magically transparent, but characteristically simple transition passage, rather than risking a pause between movements which would break the mood. The Rondo finale ends the cycle in a spirit of unbridled fun and good humor, but not without another astoundingly visionary stroke of genius, in the brief but breathtaking passage where the piano and timpani alone (how few composers have written for the kettledrums with such respect and imagination?) appear to be winding down this grandest of concertos to a most unlikely peaceful and restful conclusion, only to have the piano change its mind at the last moment in a final burst of athletic brilliance.

Finally, what are we to make of the fact that Beethoven, after creating five masterpieces, did not write another piano concerto after 1809, although he lived almost another twenty years? As a matter of fact, there are, tantalizingly, sketches for a later piano concerto, in D major, but, like the sketches for a tenth symphony, they leave us only with a glimpse of what might have been. There is, for those who are interested, another "piano" concerto, which is simply arranged for piano and orchestra of the violin concerto which Beethoven made largely for financial reasons, but which (for reasons that mystify this pianist) some pianists actually enjoy playing. There also exists another little work which occasionally surfaces in concert from time to time, a rondo in B flat major of about 8 minutes which was apparently the original and discarded last movement of the 2nd Concerto.

These five works, which run an expressive gamut that ranges from impassioned soliloquy to schlerched tender romance to soul-trembling grief to transcendent joy, have been my friends, companions, teachers, since I first started performing publicly almost thirty years ago, and my primary reason for this project is to bring them all together and allow them, metaphorically speaking, "to talk to one another." The very first concerto I ever performed with an orchestra was the Third, with the San Francisco Conservatory Orchestra when I was 16, and of course I have played all of them many times since, but they remain evergreen to me, which, it seems to me, is the very definition of a classic. I hope that the experience of hearing the five concertos as a cycle will provide even the most seasoned listener with at least an occasional new perspective on these beloved works.
"BEETHOVEN BUZZ II"

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 15, 2006 – 3:00 PM
FIRST FREE METHODIST CHURCH

featuring

MARK SALMAN
and
ORCHESTRA SEATTLE
SEATTLE CHAMBER SINGERS
George Shangrow, conductor

PROGRAM

LUDWIG van BEETHOVEN (1770-1827)
Piano Concerto No. 3 in c minor, Opus 37
Allegro con belo
Largo
Rondo: Allegro
Mark Salman, piano

LUDWIG van BEETHOVEN (1770-1827)
Piano Concerto No. 4 in G Major, Opus 58
Allegro moderato
Andante con moto
Rondo: Vivace
Mark Salman, piano

– Intermission –

LUDWIG van BEETHOVEN (1770-1827)
Choral Fantasy, Opus 80
Adagio;
Finales: Allegro – Meno allegro – Allegro molto –
Adagio, ma non troppo – Marcia, assai vivace – Allegro –
Allegretto, ma non troppo, (Quasi Andante con moto) – Presto
Mark Salman, piano
Eleanor Stallcop-Horox, Peggy Kurtz, sopranos
Emily Lunde, mezzo-soprano; Ralph Cobb, tenor
Steve Tachell, bass

Please disconnect signal watches, pagers and cellular telephones. Thank you.
Use of cameras and recording equipment is not permitted in the concert hall.

With grace, charm and sweet sounds
The harmonies of our life,
And the sense of beauty engenders
The flowers which eternally bloom.
Peace and joy advancing in perfect accord,
Like the alternating play of the waves;
All harsh and hostile elements
Render to a sublime sentiment.

When the magic sounds reign
And the sacred word is spoken,
That strongly engender the wonderful
The night and the tempest divert light,
Calm without, profound joy within,
Awaiting the great hour.
Meanwhile, the spring sun and art
Bathe in the light.

Something great, into the heart
Blossoms anew when in all its beauty,
Which spirit takes flight,
And all a choir of spirits resounds in response.
Accept then, oh you beautiful spirits
Joyously of the gifts of art;
When love and strength are united,
The favour of God rewards Man.

Mark Salman is a Steinway Artist. Today he plays a Concert Grand Steinway Piano.

We wish to extend our heartiest thanks to Sherman Clay in downtown Seattle for supplying today’s instrument.

Sherman Clay is delighted to support this event. We invite you to contact us if you have any piano questions at all. Please reach us at 206.622.7580 or via email: seattle_info@shermancray.com, We’d be delighted to hear from you!
Reflections on performing all the Beethoven piano concertos

by Jeffrey Kahane, Music Director of the Los Angeles Chamber Orchestra

Note: This piece was written by Jeffrey Kahane on the occasion of his performance of the five Beethoven piano concertos with the Santa Rosa Symphony in November 2000. It was later performed with the Aspen Chamber Symphony in December, 2001, and with the Pasadena Civic Orchestra at the LACMA in February 2006. It was also performed by the Los Angeles Chamber Orchestra at the Hollywood Bowl in August, 2003. These notes are reprinted with his permission.

Why, a listener might well ask, would anyone want to perform all the Beethoven piano concertos in the space of two evenings, and - perhaps the more important question - what is to be gained from listening to them in this way? Is it just a highbrow stunt meant to impress, or is there a serious purpose behind the project? It seems only proper to acknowledge at the outset that the concerto form naturally has an inherent element of display, a quality of "let me show you what I can do." Nonetheless, works in the genre, beginning with Beethoven and continuing in the 19th and 20th centuries, are much more than that in the late concertos of Mozart, Schubert, and Schumann, Sibelius, Bartok and others, the intent to provide the soloist not only with a showcase for virtuosity, but with a structure within which to say something meaningful, and sometimes deeply personal. We forget, too often, that the Latin root "virtus" of the Italian word "virtuoso" implies not only excellence in technical achievement (e.g., technical virtuosity and courage and virtue. In other words, the phrase "empty virtuosity" which we sometimes use to refer to a dazzling display of technique, is in fact an oxymoron: there is no true virtuosity without "virtue" in the deepest sense of the word. In one way, the Beethoven Concertos, seen as a whole, describing an arc of personal growth that over a period of more than a decade begins to some extent with "let me show you what I can do" and finally tell you what I have to say...." Indeed, with Beethoven the soloist evolves into a symbol for the individual striving to excel, to act nobly, to inspire.

When I took charge of conducting students, I tried to instill in them, with only occasional success, the fundamental principle that one could not really understand a composer's language fully without knowing the greater part of his work. At the first concert one can appreciate any great piece of music to some extent simply because it is known to itself, I don't believe anyone can fully appreciate a Beethoven string quartet without knowing all of his quartets to at least some degree, because in one sense they constitute a whole, magnificent musical autobiography; one might say they constitute and one of the most profound spiritual journeys ever expressed in any art form. This is also true to a great extent of Beethoven's piano sonatas. It is, to be sure, less true of his symphonies, which, perhaps because they are more "public," do not interact so closely with the intimate communication characteristics of his music for smaller forces. Even so, the five piano concertos, performed and experienced as a whole, do tell a story, and do describe an extraordinary evolution in style, technique, and in the growth and development of Beethoven's soul and intellect.

Beethoven inherited from Mozart's concertato form so perfectly developed in every respect, that we can actually observe in the first three concertos his struggle to fashion his own identity with respect to the form. On hearing a performance of Mozart's C minor concerto in Vienna, Beethoven is said to have remarked to his pupil Cramer, "Ah, Cramer, we will never be able to do anything like that." In his first two concertos Beethoven does not even attempt to match the profundity of that work, choosing instead to imitate the jovial, buoyant Beethoven's concerto style, a style that is an outgrowth of the language characteristic of his music for smaller forces. Even so, the five piano concertos, performed and experienced as a whole, do tell a story, and do describe an extraordinary evolution in style, technique, and in the growth and development of Beethoven's soul and intellect.

Beethoven inherited from Mozart's concertato form a form so perfectly developed in every respect, that we can actually observe in the first three concertos his struggle to fashion his own identity with respect to the form. On hearing a performance of Mozart's C minor concerto in Vienna, Beethoven is said to have remarked to his pupil Cramer, "Ah, Cramer, we will never be able to do anything like that." In his first two concertos Beethoven does not even attempt to match the profundity of that work, choosing instead to imitate the jovial, buoyant Beethoven's concerto style, a style that is an outgrowth of the language characteristic of his music for smaller forces. Even so, the five piano concertos, performed and experienced as a whole, do tell a story, and do describe an extraordinary evolution in style, technique, and in the growth and development of Beethoven's soul and intellect.

PROGRAM NOTES

When Johann Sebastian Bach "invented" the keyboard concerto in the mid 1730s, he had no idea where it would go in the hands of such musical descendants as Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Brahms, and Chopin. The composer who probably did the most to advance the form was Beethoven. His five concertos, written over just fifteen years, went from a late classical style to a romantic free-form style that would be emulated even a century later. It is in the spirit of this musical journey that we embark upon two programs comprising these wonderful works.

The most famous of Beethoven's piano students (and Liszt's teachers), Carl Czerny (1791-1857), had this to say of his master's keyboard skills:

"Beethoven's playing was notable for its tremendous power, unheard of bravura and facility. He had practiced day and night during his youth, and worked so hard that his health suffered. Beethoven's playing of slow and sustained music made an almost magical impression on the listener and, so far as I know, has never been surpassed. And at a later time, Czerny noted:

"His improvisation was most brilliant and striking. In whatever company he might choose to be, he knew how to produce such an effect upon every hearer that frequently not an eye remained dry, while many would burst into loud sobs; for there was no sound in his description of this kind that would burst into loud laughter and banter his hearers with the emotions he had aroused in them. "You are fools! he would say."

Well, let us be fools then, for we can call it lost in the talent of this legendary composer and performer.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 24TH

Piano Concerto No. 2 in B-Flat Major, Op. 19

Ludwig van Beethoven (1770 - 1827) began his musical studies at an early age with his father, a tenor at the court of the Elector of Bonn. Beethoven's father was a strict and violent man, making his young extremely painful. At 11, he was removed from school to study music exclusively. He learned to play the organ, piano, violin, and viola also and began composing. His first music was published at the age of 12 and he was appointed second organist in the Electoral Church in Bonn at age 14. He continued in that position and had numerous other musical engagements in the city until 1792 when he settled permanently in Vienna.

The second concerto actually was composed before the C Major concerto, but was not published until 1801. Beethoven personally referred to it as "not one of his best," but it was wildly successful in Vienna, adding to the composer's credit. Beethoven made it as a vehicle for his virtuosic talent, making him stand out as something more than just another young musician from Bonn.

The Allegro con brio presents its themes in a sonata-like construction. As in the works of Haydn and Mozart, the orchestra announces the themes in a large (90 measures) symphonic opening after which the piano introduces a new theme in an entirely different register. The themes are tossed back and forth between the orchestra and piano in a similar fashion to the later works of Mozart. Beethoven was clearly writing music to show his own prowess at the keyboard! The cadenza for the first movement was composed (written out) in 1809 - the time of the composition of the "Emperor" concerto. In the cadenza it is easy to see the work of the more mature Beethoven as he manipulates the themes from this opening movement. In the second movement, touch and touch more movement, not touch! With the slow movement unfolding with the piano doing fluid variations on the melody as the orchestra accompanies peacefully. The ending is particularly poignant. Finally, the Allegro molto's sonata-rondo construction takes its theme from Viennese folklore, its rhythm rendering ornamental images of spring. A romp of the first order, the ending shows typical Beethoven humor.

Piano Concerto No. 1 in C Major, Op. 15

Beethoven's Piano concerto No. 1, composed in 1797, owes much to Mozart's heroic style. As mentioned above, this was not the first concerto he had written, but the first to be published. Beethoven performed it himself at his Viennese debut in 1800, and it must have been larger than life to the public at the time. Both of these first concerti were received by the Viennese public with great gusto.

The large orchestral introduction marked Allegro con brio presents two themes, the first (similar to the march theme in Beethoven's Piano concerto No. 25), is a joyful theme for full orchestra, while the other is softer and more lyrical. Borrowing a technique from Mozart's manner of composition, the piano does not start with the theme presented by the orchestra, but with an innovative musical idea, and the theme proper are later presented by the instrumental solos. The piano at last gets a chance at the more lyrical second theme. All of the themes are beautifully exhibited in the cadenza. The Coda is stated by the piano with some support from the string. As the movement develops, it becomes a melodic duet between the piano and the orchestra. This piano part has a particularly fine coda (ending).

The Allegro scherzando is a rollicking, free-spirited dance. The first contrasting theme is lyrical and predictable until Beethoven shifts into dramatic mode during which we can almost see the arch-villain lying the maiden to the railroad tracks! The second contrasting theme is highly chromatic - almost romantic. It leads to a tune so reminiscent of Hungarian dance style, but just a bit funny. One wonders what Beethoven's variations on "Hernando's Hideaway" might be like! Beethoven isn't quite gave me a secret glance whenever he was at the end of one of the invisible passages and my scarcely concealable anxiety not to miss the decisive moment amused him greatly and he laughed heartily at the jovial supper which we ate afterwards."

The first movement opens with a lengthy exposition of the principal themes by the orchestra alone, a passage so thorough and dramatically revealed that Donald Francis Tovey called it "something that dangerous in character that Donald Francis Tovey can hardly resist," because "it rouses no expectations of the entry of a solo instrument." After a quick return to the tonic key of C minor and a dramatic fermata, the piano finally enters with three explosive scales, leading to its own rendition of the opening theme.

In contrast to the energy of the opening movement, the central slow movement — in the distant key of E major — seems to make time stand still. The finale, a combination of sonata and rondo forms, returns to C minor, although Beethoven briefly flirts with E major in the middle. The delightful coda is in C major and moves to a new time signature (6/8), just as Mozart did in his own C minor concerto.

Piano Concerto No. 4 in G Major, Op. 58

The earliest sketch for the opening theme of this first movement appeared in the Eroica sketchbook in 1804. Beethoven waited until after Lenore was completed to focus fully on the fourth concerto (1806-7). When completed, he had challenges trying to find a soloist for a premiere public performance. The first soloist complained that the music was too difficult to learn quickly and refused to agree. In the end, Beethoven himself played the solo part at a concert at the Akademie on December 22, 1808, along with the Fifth and Sixth symphonies, parts of the C Major Mass and the Choral Fantasy. This work is dedicated to Beethoven’s friend, student, and early patron Archduke Rudolph of Austria.

The Fourth Piano Concerto leads the genre into a new phase of thought, feeling, beauty and sensitivity. Beethoven accentuates the feelings of lightness and grace by setting the concerto in G major, a key he often uses in lighter chamber music and piano sonatas. A major element of this work is serenity, this mood is established from the very beginning when the piano opens alone.

There has been some discussion about the slow movement's relationship to the legend of Orpheus. Nineteenth-century theorist Adolf Bernhard Marx described the scene of Orpheus confronting the shade of Hell and later as Orpheus taming the wild beasts with his lyre. Although there is no evidence of programmatic inspiration for this movement, Czerny states that "there is no doubt that in many of his most beautiful works, Beethoven was inspired by visions or pictures from his own imagination." Beethoven sets the soloist against the strings in a fierce dialogue.

As the movement progresses, it becomes obvious that the piano is winning the argument and the strings are reduced to timidity, pizzicato utterances. The final movement, a rondo in G major, brings the opposing forces back together with an abundance of energy. There is a striking beginning in C major that makes the listener question which tonality will prevail to the final cadence. In the end, the graceful G major triumphs.

Fantasy in C minor for Piano, Chorus, and Orchestra, Op. 80

The Choral Fantasy was the finale to a four-hour concert on December 22, 1808, that also premiered the fourth piano concerto. It is the most famous of Beethoven's works. The Choral Fantasy was written for a benefit concert for musicians’ widows earlier in the day. Beethoven quarreled with the soprano soloist and had to find a replacement at the last minute. The theater had no heat and was bitterly cold. During the performance, the piece had to be stopped in the middle and restarted. According to Beethoven’s biographer, Anton Schindler, the Choral Fantasy, as might be expected, “simply fell apart.”

Though its first performance may have been disastrous, the Choral Fantasy was a truly original work. It is a combination of fantasy for solo piano, variations on a song (Beethoven’s own Gegenliebe—“Mutual Love”), and piano concerto, culminating in an grandiose, festive “something or other” for piano, chorus and orchestra and foreshadows the revolutionary grandeur of the Ninth Symphony’s “Ode to Joy” theme written 16 years later.

The first piano introduction is a slow, virtuosic, 26-bar piano introduction. A minor tonic key modulates to major and back again. The main part of the piece, marked “Finale,” begins with an allegro theme played by the cellos and basses. Next, the solo piano introduces the choral theme in an ornamented version. Variations on the theme are then played by the flutes, oboes, clarinets, and string soloists. A full orchestral version of the theme leads into a more lyrical piano line. Pounding eight notes resonate from the piano, accompanied by the orchestra, as the piece modulates back to C major. A serene, flowing Adagio begins with a call-and-response section between double reeds, horn, and piano leads into the Marcia, or march, in F-major. A repeat of the instrumental theme from the first allegro, transitions into the choral entrance.

The soprano and alto sing the main theme in lovely triads before the tenors and basses take their turn. The entire chorus is joined by the orchestra in an energetic rendition of the theme, and a presto coda with orchestra, chorus, and piano brings the piece to a close.

It is a shame that as Beethoven grew more and more deaf, he could not hear the praise and excitement his pieces provided how to end the work, and he seems to stumble just as if. A final tentive oboe meandering leads us to believe there might be a bit more to this movement, but no, just a quick chuckle, and we’re through.

Piano Concerto No. 5 ("Emperor") in E-flat Major, Op. 73

When Beethoven’s first two piano concertos were perhaps more classical in style, the fifth is truly revolutionary. Beethoven composed the concerto in Vienna in 1809, dedicating it to the Archduke Rudolph. Its first public performance featured the 25-year-old pianist, Friedrich Schneider, with the Gewandhaus Orchestra of Leipzig on November 28, 1811. In addition to the solo piano, the concerto is scored for pairs of flutes, oboes, clarinets, bassoons, horns and trumpets, timpani, and strings.

No one knows for certain how Beethoven’s final piano concerto came to be known as the “Emperor.” Although an oft-repeated story attributes the nickname to a French cavalry officer at the first Vienna performance who rose to his feet and shouted “C’est l’Empereur!” — “It is the Emperor!” — there is no reason to believe in an official connection between the concerto and the Emperor of Austria. Beethoven later dedicated his Fifth Symphony to Emperor Franz Joseph I, an honor he had similarly extended to his earlier Eroica Symphony (also in Beethoven’s “heroic” key of E-flat) to Napoleon, he tore up the title page in disgust when the French general declared himself Emperor. By the time Beethoven was at work on his fifth piano concerto, Napoleon’s armies were invading Vienna — and the increase in the movement’s intensity was a result of his fury over the Austrian government’s refusal to release Archduke Charles, who was forced to bury his head under pillows to save what little remained of his hearing from the constant military bombardment.

The concerto itself is conceived on a grand scale, and is unlike anything that had come before. Glenn Gould called it “a symphony with obligatory piano,” and indeed, the work is longer than Beethoven’s earlier Fifth Symphony. The opening movement is symphonic in scope, and in orchestral introduction, but with solo piano passages separated by bold choruses from the orchestra. Instead of the expected first and second subject, Beethoven presents no fewer than five separate themes that will each be developed and recapitulated. For the first time in any of his concertos, Beethoven wrote out a cadenza as an integral part of the score, appending the note, “Do not make a cadenza [i.e., do not improvise one of your own], but attack the following immediately.”

The comparatively brief slow movement is cast in B major — the key furthest removed from E-flat, but one foreshadowed earlier by its repeated B-flat major phrase in the beginning of the first movement. Rather than reaching a formal conclusion, Beethoven uses a device he first employed in the “Appassionata” piano sonata, linking the slow movement to the finale without pause. Woodwinds and horns intone a unison B natural, then sink a half step to B-flat. While the horns sustain a B-flat pedal, the piano muses about an E-flat major triad, forming the tune that will become the recurring melody of the final movement. The solo piano introduces this syncopated 6/8 tune, which launches the rondo final in palindromic A–B–A–C–A–B–A form.

While Beethoven would live for another 18 years, he would not complete another concerto. Later sketches for a sixth piano concerto in C major were abandoned. Certainly his loss of hearing was a contributing factor, but perhaps — having reinvented the concerto form itself — he turned to transforming other musical forms, most notably the symphonic, a decade and a half later with his Symphony No. 9.

Sunday, October 15th

Piano Concerto No. 3 in C minor, Op. 37

Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart began sketching his third piano concerto during the 1790s, but most of the work was done in 1800. The composer was the soloist at its first performance in Vienna on April 5, 1803. The score calls for pairs of woodwinds, horns and trumpets, timpani and strings.

The concerto was introduced at a concert in the sort of marathon affair Beethoven loved: in addition to the concerto, the Symphony No. 2 and the oratorio Christ on the Mount of Olives were also given their premieres, and the already familiar Symphony No. 1 was heard as well.

On the day of the performance, Beethoven was discovered at 5:00 AM copying out trombone parts for the oratorio. The one and only rehearsal for the event commenced at 8:00 AM, running non-stop until mid-afternoon when Prince Carl von Lichnowsky, Beethoven’s patron, sent out for cold cuts and wine to soothe the disgruntled musicians. After their meal, the Prince requested that they run through the oratorio “just one more time.” The concerto, which was to have begun at 6:00 PM, was so long that some music scheduled for the program was dropped. Nevertheless, the fame of the young 32-year-old Prince composer drew a sold-out house, even though the usual prices had been doubled — and, for the box seats, tripled — for the occasion.

In Thayer’s Life of Beethoven, Ignaz von Seyfried recalls how he was recruited to turn pages for Beethoven while the composer played a solo part in his new concerto:

"[O]ut heaven help,—that was easier said than done. I saw almost nothing but empty leaves; at the most on one page or the other a few Egyptian hieroglyphics wholly unintelligible to me scribbled down to serve as clues for him; for he played nearly all of the solo part from memory, since, as was so often the case, he had not had time to put it all down on paper. He gave me a secret glance whenever he was at the end of one of the invisible passages and my scarcely concealable anxiety not to miss the decisive moment amused him greatly and he laughed heartily at the jovial supper which we ate afterwards."

The first movement opens with a lengthy exposition of the principal themes by the orchestra alone, a passage so thoroughly developed that it is best described in character: "something dies dangerously before he is allowed to look at it, because it rouses no expectations of the entry of a solo instrument." After a quick return to the tonic key of C minor and a dramatic fermata, the piano finally enters with three explosive scales, leading to its own rendition of the opening theme.

In contrast to the energy of the opening movement, the central slow movement — in the distant key of E major — seems to take more time stand still. The finales, a combination of sonata and rondo forms, returns to C minor, although Beethoven briefly flirts with E major in the middle. The delightful codetta in C major and moves to a new time signature (6/6), just as Mozart did in his own C minor concerto.

Piano Concerto No. 4 in G Major, Op. 58

The earliest sketch for the opening theme of this first movement appeared in the Eroica sketchbook in 1804. Beethoven waited until after Laronog was completed to focus fully on the fourth concerto (Bop.6). When completed, he had challenged trying to find a soloist for a premiere public performance. The first soloist complained that the music was too difficult to learn and quitted the project. In the end, Beethoven himself played the solo part at a concert at the Akademie on December 22, 1808, along with the Fifth and Sixth symphonies, parts of the C Major Mass and the Choral Fantasy. This work is dedicated to Beethoven's friend, student, and arch-pedagogue, Archduke Rudolph of Austria.

The Fourth Piano Concerto leads the genre into a new phase of thought, feeling, beauty and sensitivity. Beethoven accentuates the feeling of lightness and grace by setting the concerto in C major, a key he often uses for lighter chamber music and piano sonatas. A major element of this work is serenity, this mood is established from the very beginning when the piano opens alone.

There has been some discussion about the slow movement's relationship to the legend of Orpheus. Nineteenth-century theorist Adolph Bernhard Marx described the scene of Orpheus confronting the shade of Hell and later as Orpheus taming the wild beasts with his lyre. Although there is no evidence of programmatic inspiration for this movement, Czerny states that "there is no doubt that in many of his most beautiful works, Beethoven was inspired by visions or pictures from his own imagination." Beethoven sets the solo against the strings in a fierce dialogue. As the movement progresses, it becomes obvious that the piano is winning the argument and the strings are reduced to timbre, pizzicato utterances. The final movement, a rondo in G major, brings the opposing forces back together with an abundance of energy. There is a striking beginning in C major that makes the listener question which tonality will prevail to the final cadence. In the end, the graceful G major triumphs.

Fantasy in C minor for Piano, Chorus, and Orchestra, Op. 80

The Choral Fantasy was the finale to a four-hour concert on December 22, 1808, that also premiered the fourth piano concerto (Opus 73, Coriolan Symphony, No. 5), and included an aria (Aria perfettissima), a Hymn with Latin text, and several improvisations for piano alone and with orchestra. The concert was an epic event by anyone's standards. Even more impressive, the Fantasy was composed days before it was premiered, poet Christopher Kuffner was commissioned shortly before the performance to write the text to fit the music, and the performers had one afternoon's rehearsal after having participated in a benefit concert for musicians' widows earlier in the day. Beethoven quizzed with the soprano soloist and had to find a replacement at the last minute. The theater had no heat and was bitterly cold. During the performance, the piece had to be stopped in the middle and restarted. According to Beethoven's biographer, Anton Schindler, the Choral Fantasy, as might be expected, "simply fell apart."

Though its first performance may have been disastrous, the Choral Fantasy was a truly original work. It is a combination of fantasy for solo piano, variations on a song (Beethoven's own Gegenliebe — "Mutual Love," 1795) and a piano concerto, culminating in a grandiose, festive "something or other" for piano, chorus and orchestra and foreshadows the revolutionary grandeur of the Ninth Symphony's "Ode to Joy" theme written 16 years later.

The finale is a slow, virtuosic 26-bar piano introduction, a minor tonic key modulates to major and back again. The main part of the piece, marked "Finale", begins with an allegro theme played by the cellos and basses. Next, the solo piano introduces the choral theme in an ornamented version. Variations on the theme are then played by the flutes, oboes, clarinets, and string soloists. A full orchestral version of the theme leads into a more lyrical piano line.

Pounding eight notes resonate from the piano, accompanied by the orchestra, as the piece modulates back to C major. A serene, flowing allegro theme is then left behind with a call-and-response section between double reeds, horn, and piano leads into the Marcia, or march, in F minor. A repeat of the instrumental theme from the allegro, transitions into the choral entrance.

The soprano and alto sing the main theme in lovely triads before the tenors and basses take their turn. The entire chorus is joined by the orchestra in an energetic rendition of the theme, and a presto coda with orchestra, chorus, and piano brings the piece to a close.

It is a shame that as Beethoven grew more and more deaf, he could not hear the praise and excitement his pieces

Piano Concerto No. 5 ("Emperor") in E-flat Major, Op. 73

While Beethoven's first two piano concertos were perhaps more classical in style, the fifth is truly revolutionary. Beethoven composed the concerto in Vienna in 1809, dedicating it to the Archduke Rudolph. Its first public performance featured the 25-year-old pianist, Friedrich Schneider, with the Gewandhaus Orchestra of Leipzig on November 28, 1811. In addition to the solo piano, the concerto is scored for pairs of flutes, oboes, clarinets, bassoons, horns and trumpets, timpani, and strings.

No one knows for certain how Beethoven's final piano concerto came to be known as the "Emperor." Although an oft-repeated story attributes the nickname to a French cavalry officer at the first Vienna performance who rose to his feet and shouted "C'est l'Empereur!" It is more likely the invention of a publisher in search of a catchy title. Certainly Beethoven was not responsible for the appellation. Although he had originally intended to dedicate his earlier Eroica Symphony (also in Beethoven's "heroic" key of E-flat) to Napoleon, he tore up the title page in disgust when the French general declared himself Emperor. The time Beethoven was at work on his fifth piano concerto, Napoleon's armies were invading Vienna — and the increase in strength of the composition was forced to bury his head under pillows to save what little remained of his hearing from the constant military bombardment.

The concerto itself is conceived on a grand scale, and is unlike anything that had come before. Glenn Gould called it a "symphony with obligatory piano," and indeed, the work is longer than Beethoven's earlier Fifth Symphony. The opening movement begins with a concert introduction, but with solo piano passages separated by bold chords from the orchestra. Instead of the expected first and second subject, Beethoven presents no fewer than five separate themes that will each be developed and recapitulated. For the first time in any of his concertos, Beethoven wrote out a cadenza as an integral part of the score, appending the note, "Do not make a cadenza [i.e., do not improvise one of your own], but attack the following immediately."

The comparatively brief slow movement is cast in B major — the key furthest removed from E-flat, but one foreshadowed earlier in his requiem's E-flat major episode in the first movement. Rather than reaching a formal conclusion, Beethoven uses a device he first employed in the Appassionata piano sonata, linking the slow movement to the finale without pause. Woodwinds and horns intone a unison B natural, then sink a half step to B-flat. While the horns sustain a B-flat pedal, the piano muses about an E-flat major triad, forming the tune that will become the recurring melody of the final movement. The solo piano introduces this syncopated 6/8 tune, which launches the rondo finale in palindromic A–B–C–A–B–A form.

While Beethoven would live for another 18 years, he would not complete another concerto. Later sketches for a sixth piano concerto in D major were abandoned. Certainly his loss of hearing was a contributing factor, but perhaps — having reinvented the concerto form itself — he turned to transforming other musical forms, most notably the symphonic, a decade and a half later with his Symphony No. 9.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 15TH

Piano Concerto No. 3 in C minor, Op. 37

Beethoven began sketching his third piano concerto during the 1790s, but most of the work was done in 1800. The composer was the soloist at its first performance in Vienna on April 5, 1803. The score calls for pairs of woodwinds, horns and trumpets, timpani and strings.

The concerto was introduced at a concert in the sort of marathon affair Beethoven loved: in addition to the concerto, the Symphony No. 2 and the oratorio Christ on the Mount of Olives were also given their premieres, and the already familiar Symphony No. 1 was heard as well.

On the day of the performance, Beethoven was discovered at 5:00 AM copying out trombone parts for the oratorio. The one and only rehearsal for the event commenced at 8:00 AM, running non-stop until mid-afternoon when Prince Carl von Lichtenowsky, Beethoven's patron, sent out for cold cuts and wine to soothe the disgruntled musicians. After their meal, the Prince requested that they run through the oratorio "just one more time." The concert, which was to have begun at 6:00 PM, was so long that some music scheduled for the program was dropped. Nevertheless, the fame of the young 32-year-old Prince composer drew a sold-out house, even though the usual prices had been doubled — and, for the box seats, tripled — for the occasion.

In Thayer's Life of Beethoven, Ignaz von Seyfried recalls how he was recruited to turn pages for Beethoven while the composer played the piano in the last part of his new concerto:

"[U]p to heaven help!—that was easier said than done. I saw almost nothing but empty leaves; at the most on one page or the other a few Egyptian hieroglyphics wholly unintelligible to me scribbled down to serve as clues for him; for he played nearly all of the solo part from memory, since, as was so often the case, he had not had time to put it all down on paper. He
“BEETHOVEN BUZZ II”

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 15, 2006 – 3:00 PM
FIRST FREE METHODIST CHURCH

featuring

MARK SALMAN
and
ORCHESTRA SEATTLE
SEATTLE CHAMBER SINGERS
George Shangrow, conductor

PROGRAM

LUDWIG van BEETHOVEN (1770-1827)
Piano Concerto No. 3 in c minor, Opus 37
Allegro con brio
Largo
Rondo: Allegro
Mark Salman, piano

LUDWIG van BEETHOVEN (1770-1827)
Piano Concerto No. 4 in G Major, Opus 58
Allegro moderato
Andante con moto
Rondo: Vivace
Mark Salman, piano

– Intermission –

LUDWIG van BEETHOVEN (1770-1827)
Choral Fantasy, Opus 80
Adagio;
Finale. Allegro – Menu allegro – Allegro molto –
Adagio, ma non troppo – Marcia, assai vivace – Allegro –
Allegretto, ma non troppo, (Quasi Andante con moto) – Presto
Mark Salman, piano
Eleanor Stallcop-Horox, Peggy Kurtz, sopranos
Emily Lunde, mezzo-soprano; Ralph Cobb, tenor
Steve Tachell, bass

Please disconnect signal watches, pagers and cellular telephones. Thank you.
Use of cameras and recording equipment is not permitted in the concert hall.

With grace, charm and sweet sounds
The harmonies of our life,
And the sense of beauty engenders
The flowers which eternally bloom.
Peace and joy advancing in perfect accord,
Like the alternating play of the waves;
All harsh and hostile elements
Render to a sublime sentiment.

When the magic sounds reign
And the sacred word is spoken,
That strongly engender the wonderful,
The night and the tempest divest light,
Calm without, profound joy within,
Awaiting the great hour.
Meanwhile, the spring sun and art
Bathe in the light.

Something great, into the heart
Blooms anew when in all its beauty,
Which spirit taken flight,
And all a choir of spirits resounds in response.
Accept then, oh you beautiful spirits
Joyously of the gifts of art.
When love and strength are united,
The favour of God rewards Man.

Mark Salman is a Steinway Artist. Today he plays a Concert Grand Steinway Piano.

We wish to extend our heartiest thanks to Sherman Clay in downtown Seattle for supplying today’s instrument.

Sherman Clay is delighted to support this event. We invite you to contact us if you have any piano questions at all. Please reach us at 206.622.7580 or via email: seattle_info@shermanclay.com.
We’d be delighted to hear from you!
Reflections on performing all the Beethoven piano concertos

by Jeffrey Kahane, Music Director of the Los Angeles Chamber Orchestra

[Note: This piece was written by Jeffrey Kahane on the occasion of his performance of the five Beethoven piano concertos with the Santa Rosa Symphony in November 2001; this essay was published in Los Angeles Magazine in December 2001. The five concerto performances were performed as part of the Ninth Los Angeles Chamber Music Festival in July 2003, and in two concerts with LACO at the Hollywood Bowl in August 2003. These notes are reprinted with his permission.]

Why, a listener might well ask, would anyone want to perform all the Beethoven piano concertos in the space of two evenings, and — perhaps the more important question — what is to be gained from listening to them in this way? Is it just a highbrow stunt meant to impress, or is there a serious purpose behind the project? It seems only proper to acknowledge at the outset that the concert form naturally has an inherent element of display, a quality of "let me show you what I can do." Nonetheless, works in the genre, beginning with Beethoven and Brahms and going on to Dvorak, Schumann, Sibelius, Bartok and others, the intent to provide the soloist not only with a showcase for virtuosity, but with a structure within which to say something meaningful, and sometimes deeply personal. We forget, too often, that the Latin root "virtus" of the Italian word "virtuoso" implies not only excellence but courage and audacity; in other words, the phrase "empty virtuosity" which we sometimes use to refer to a dazzling display of technique, is in fact an oxymoron: there is no true virtuosity without "virtue" in the deepest sense of the word. In one way, the Beethoven Concertos, seen as a whole, describing an arc of personal growth that over a period of more than a decade begins to some extent with "let me show you what I can do" and finally tells you "let me show you what I have to say,..."

Indeed, with Beethoven the soloist evolves into a symbol for the individual striving to excel, to act nobly, to inspire.

When I taught conservatory students, I tried to instill in them, with only occasional success, the fundamental principle that one cannot really understand a composer's language fully without knowing the greatest work of his art. Although of course one can appreciate any great piece of music to some extent simply by knowing its own terms, I don't believe anyone can fully appreciate a Beethoven string quartet without knowing all of his quartets to at least some degree, because in one sense they constitute a single, magnificent musical autobiography; one might say they constitute and describe one of the most profound spiritual journeys ever expressed in any art form. This is also true to a great extent of Beethoven's piano sonatas. It is, to be sure, less true of his symphonies — perhaps because they are more "public" in consciousness — but they seem to intimate the suitable and intimate communication characteristic of his music for smaller forces. Even so, the five piano concertos, performed and experienced as a whole, do tell a story, and do describe an extraordinary evolution in style, technique, and in the growth and development of Beethoven's soul and intellect.

Beethoven inherited from Mozart's concert form so perfectly developed in every respect, that we can actually observe in the first three concertos his struggle to fashion his own identity with respect to the form. On hearing a performance of Mozart's C minor Concerto in Vienna, Beethoven is said to have remarked to his pupil Cramer, "Ah, Cramer, we will never be able to do anything like that." In his first two concertos Beethoven does not even attempt to match the profundity of that work, choosing instead to create the (virtual) C minor Concerto as a kind of prelude to the story of Beethoven's later work. It is an outgrowth of the language characteristic of his music for smaller forces. Even so, the five piano concertos, performed and experienced as a whole, do tell a story, and do describe an extraordinary evolution in style, technique, and in the growth and development of Beethoven's soul and intellect.

Beethoven inherited from Mozart's concert form so perfectly developed in every respect, that we can actually observe in the first three concertos his struggle to fashion his own identity with respect to the form. On hearing a performance of Mozart's C minor Concerto in Vienna, Beethoven is said to have remarked to his pupil Cramer, "Ah, Cramer, we will never be able to do anything like that." In his first two concertos Beethoven does not even attempt to match the profundity of that work, choosing instead to create the (virtual) C minor Concerto as a kind of prelude to the story of Beethoven's later work. It is an outgrowth of the language characteristic of his music for smaller forces. Even so, the five piano concertos, performed and experienced as a whole, do tell a story, and do describe an extraordinary evolution in style, technique, and in the growth and development of Beethoven's soul and intellect.

The Allegro con brio presents its themes in a sonata-like construction. As in the ways of Haydn and Mozart, the orchestra announces the themes in a large (90 measures) sonata-like opening after which the piano introduces a new theme in an entirely different register. The themes are tossed back and forth between the orchestra and piano in a similar fashion to the later works of Mozart. Beethoven was clearly writing music to show his own prowess at the keyboard! The cadenza for the first movement was composed (written out) in 1809 — the time of the composition of the "Emperor" concerto. In the cadenza it is easy to see the work of the more mature Beethoven as he manipulates the several themes from this opening movement.

A second movement touch is given in the C minor Concerto. Here movement unfolds with the piano doing florid variations on the melody as the orchestra accompanies peacefully. The ending is particularly poignant. Finally, the Allegro molto's sonata-romantic construction takes its theme from Viennese folklore, its rhythm rendering onomatopoetic images of spring. A romp of the first order, the ending shows typical Beethoven humor.

PROGRAM NOTES

When Johann Sebastian Bach "invented" the keyboard concerto in the mid 1730s, he had no idea where it would go in the hands of such musical descendents as Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Brahms, and Chopin. We can probably do the most to advance the form was Beethoven. His five concertos, written over just fifteen years, went from a late romantic style to a romantic free-form style that would be emulated even a century later! It is in the spirit of this musical journey that we embark upon two programs comprising these wonderful works.

The most famous of Beethoven's piano students (and Liszt's teachers), Carl Czerny (1791-1897), had this to say of his master's keyboard skills:

"Beethoven's playing was notable for its tremendous power, unbeared of bravura and facility. He had practiced day and night during his youth, and worked so hard that his health suffered. Beethoven's playing of slow and sustained music made an almost indescribable impression on the listener and, so far as I know, has never been surpassed."

And at a later time, Czerny noted:

"His improvisation was most brilliant and striking. In whatever company he might come to be, he knew how to produce such an effect upon every hearer that frequently not an eye remained dry, while many would burst out into loud sobs; for therein was something wonderful in his expression.... After ending an improvisation of this kind he would burst into loud laughter and banter his hearers with the emotions he had aroused in them. "You are fools! he would say."

Well, let us be fools then, for we can all get lost in the talent of this legendary composer and performer.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 22ND

Piano Concerto No. 2 in B-flat Major, Op. 19

Ludwig van Beethoven (1770 – 1827) began his musical studies at an early age with his father, a tenor at the court of the Elector of Bonn. Beethoven's father was a strict and violent man, making his youth extremely painful. At 14, he was removed from school to study music exclusively. He learned to play the organ, piano, violin, and viola also and began composing. His first music was published at the age of 12 and he was appointed second organist in the Electoral Chapel in Bonn at age 14. He continued in that position and had numerous other musical engagements in the city until 1792 when he settled permanently in Vienna.

The "second" concerto actually was composed before the C Major concerto, but was not published until 1808.

Beethoven personally referred to it as "not one of his best," but it was wildly successful in Vienna, adding to the composer's credibility in the city. Beethoven used it as a vehicle for his virtuosic talent, making him stand out as something more than just another young musician from Bonn.

The Allegro con brio presents its themes in a sonata-like construction. As in the ways of Haydn and Mozart, the orchestra announces the themes in a large (90 measures) sonata-like opening after which the piano introduces a new theme in an entirely different register. The themes are tossed back and forth between the orchestra and piano in a similar fashion to the later works of Mozart. Beethoven was clearly writing music to show his own prowess at the keyboard! The cadenza for the first movement was composed (written out) in 1809 — the time of the composition of the "Emperor" concerto. In the cadenza it is easy to see the work of the more mature Beethoven as he manipulates the several themes from this opening movement.

A second movement touch is given in the C minor Concerto. Here movement unfolds with the piano doing florid variations on the melody as the orchestra accompanies peacefully. The ending is particularly poignant. Finally, the Allegro molto's sonata-romantic construction takes its theme from Viennese folklore, its rhythm rendering onomatopoetic images of spring. A romp of the first order, the ending shows typical Beethoven humor.

Piano Concerto No. 1 in C Major, Op. 15

Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 1, composed in 1797, owes much to Mozart's heroic style. As mentioned above, this was not the first concerto he had written, but the first to be published. Beethoven performed it himself at his Viennese debut in 1800, and it must have held a larger life than the public at the time. Both of these first concertos were received by the Viennese public with great gusto.

The large orchestral introduction marked Allegro con brio presents two themes, the first, (similar to the march theme in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 25), is a joyful theme for full orchestra, while the other is softer and more lyrical. Borrowing a technique from Mozart's manner of composition, the piano does not start with the theme presented by the orchestra, but with an innovative musical idea, and the themes proper are later presented by the instrumental soloists. The piano at last gets a chance at the more lyrical second theme. All of the themes are beautifully exhibited in the cadenza. The large theme is stated by the piano with some support from the strings. As the movement develops, it becomes a melodious duet between the piano and the orchestra. This piano cadenza has a particularly fine coda (ending).

The Allegro scherzando is a romp, with a danceable refrain. The first contrasting theme is lyrical and predictable until Beethoven shifts into dramatic mode during which we can almost see the arch-villain lying the maiden to the railroad tracks! The second contrasting theme is highly chromatic — almost romantic. It leads to a tune so reminiscent of Hungarian dance style, but just a bit funny. One wonders what Beethoven's variations on "Hernando's Hideaway" might be like! Beethoven isn't quite whole second movement, finally burst out in a joyful, indeed almost rauschful explosion a minute or so into the last movement, the effect is like stepping out into brilliant sunshine after spending a long and contemplative time deep in the woods, or perhaps even in a cave or underground. There is a tradition, dating back to the time of Liszt, which associates the slow movement with the myth of Orpheus taming the Furies. Whether or not there is actual substance to this, I can think of very few pages in music that come so close to articulating speech, or that so movingly reenact the power of humility and gentleness to melt the hardened and angry heart, as do those of the central movement of the G major Concerto. It is not the conquering hero but the still, small voice that wins the battle in this work.

The last concerto, which for a long time now has been known by the sobriquet "Emperor," is one of the best known and best loved works in the literature. At one time, I remember reading somewhere, there were more recordings of this piece in the catalog than any other piece of classical music. There is, of course, a danger to any work of art when it becomes so familiar that we lose sight of how remarkable and pathbreaking it is. This can certainly be said of many of Beethoven's most famous works, and the Fifth Concerto, like the Fourth, benefits particularly from being heard in close proximity to its four siblings, particularly its immediate predecessor, from which it is so utterly different that someone who didn't know Beethoven's music well might think it by another man altogether.

It is rather amazing that the journey from the easiest of the concertos (and remember that the one we call no. 2 was actually composed before no. 1, but was published later and thus bears the later number) to the last of them took only about fifteen years, and that in the process of that journey the scope, sound and in some ways the very nature of the concerto form would be changed forever. At nearly forty minutes, the Fifth concerto is substantially longer than any concerto written previously, and longer than any that would be written until those of Brahms. Not merely length but also style and tone, and, of course, the orchestration, make this the prototype of the "symphonic" concerto. Like the orchestral expositions Brahms concertos, the grand orchestral exposition that follows the soloist's opening cadenza/dialogue with the orchestra feels almost like a symphony, and I believe that was in fact, in part, the intention. It is both interesting and historically significant that in this piece, for the first time in the history of the form, Beethoven expressly forbids the introduction of a cadenza by the performer at the traditional moment towards the end of the first movement, writing in fearsean Italian, "Non si fa una cadenza, m'attacca subito il seguente." (Do not play a cadenza, but rather immediately play the following passage!) At this very moment, when might expect a huge and grand improvisation to match the enormous scale of the first movement, Beethoven writes instead a brief but hair-raising cadenza-like passage that leads seamlessly into a new theme, with perfect naturalness traverses an emotional landscape ranging from icy and remote to meltingly warm and Romantic, and, finally thrillingly triumphant. Beethoven often manages to create monuments out of the simplest building blocks, but rarely so impressively as he does in the first movement of this work.

If the master could be accused of displaying a bit of machismo in the first movement of the Fifth, nowhere in all his music does he show greater tenderness than in the second movement, perhaps a cross between a nocturne and a hymn, which to my ear prefigures both Chopin and Brahms. In yet another significant step towards the Romantic concerto, Beethoven chooses (as he does often in later works, and as Mendelssohn, Schumann and Liszt would imitate) to link the final two movements with a magically inspirational, but characteristically simple transition, rather than risking a pause between movements which would break the mood. The Rondo finale ends the cycle in a spirit of unbridled fun and good humor, but not without another astounding visionary stroke of genius, in the brief but breathtaking passage where the piano and timpani alone (how few composers have written for the kettledrums with such respect and imagination!) appear to be winding down this grandest of concertos to a most unlikely peaceful and restful conclusion, only to have the piano change its mind at the last moment in a final burst of athletic brilliance.

Finally, what are we to make of the fact that Beethoven, after creating five masterpieces, did not write another piano concerto after 1809, although he lived almost another twenty years? As a matter of fact, there are, tantalizingly, sketches for a later piano concerto, in D major, but, like the sketches for a tenth symphony, they leave us only with a glimpse of what might have been. There is, for those who are interested, another "piano" concerto, which is simply an arrangement for piano and orchestra of the violin concerto which Beethoven made largely for financial reasons, but which (for reasons that mystify this pianist) some pianists actually enjoy playing. There also exists another little work which occasionally surfaces in concert from time to time, a rondo in B flat major of about 8 minutes which was apparently the original and discarded last movement of the 2nd Concerto.

These five works, which run an expressive gamut that ranges from insipid schoolboy humor to achingly tender romance to soultrembiling grief to transcendent joy, have been my friends, companions, teachers, since I first started performing publicly almost thirty years ago, and my primary reason for this project is to bring them all together and allow them, metaphorically speaking, to "talk to one another." The very first concerto I ever performed with an orchestra was the Third, with the San Francisco Conservatory Orchestra when I was 16, and of course I have played all of them many times since, but they remain evergreen to me, which, it seems to me, is the very definition of a classic. I hope that the experience of hearing the five concertos as a cycle will provide even the most seasoned listener with at least an occasional new perspective on these beloved works.

Please disconnect signal watches, pagers and cellular telephones. Thank you. Use of cameras and recording equipment is not permitted in the concert hall.
ORCHESTRA SEATTLE

VIOLIN
- Susie Stinnett
- Elizabeth Duff (9/24)
- Deborah Dout
- Audrey Don
- Dawn Julian (9/24)
- Katherine
- Hakan Olsson (9/10)
- Andrew Schirmer (9/15)
- Julie Reed (9/24)
- Julie Reed (9/24)
- Annie Roberts
- Valerie Ross
- Katie Sauter Messick
- Karen Thomson
- Matthew Wynn (9/15)
- Jo Hassel (9/24)
- Steve Messick
- Kevin McCarthy
- Chris Simons (10/15)
- Rabi Lahiri
- Melissa Underhill

CLARINET
- Sean Barker (10/15)
- Alan Lawrence (9/24)
- Steve Nofisberger (9/24)
- Jeff Eldridge
- Judy Lawrence

CELLO
- Don Crevie
- Tim Hardwick (9/24)
- Matthew Kruse (10/15)

TRUMPET
- David Cole
- Melisa Underhill

SEATTLE CHAMBER SINGERS

SOPRANO
- Susan Cobb
- Dale Searls

ALTO
- Carolyn Gray
- John Blackwell
- Keith Barlow
- Patrick Erickson
- Courtney Fuller

BASS
- Stephen Brady
- Andrew Danielsen
- Douglas Searls
- Marc Fitchett
- Larry Maloney
- Paddy McDonald

Tenor
- Ronald Carson
- Ralph Cobb
- Alvin Koon
- Joe LaSue

Baritone
- Thomas Nesbit
- Vic Royer
- Brian Russell

 Orchestra Seattle, George Shagnow, Music Director **

Messiah
- Handel: Messiah
- Sunday, December 3, 2006 - 3:00 PM
- Seattle Chamber Singers

Holiday
- Monday, December 18, 2006 - 7:30 PM
- Meyers Hall
- Johann Sebastian Bach: Magnificat, BWV 243
- Robert Kochley: Holiday arrangements
- Family sing-along

Winter Baroque
- Friday, February 4, 2007 - 8:00 PM
- Franz Joseph Haydn: Symphony No. 45 in F-sharp minor ("Farewell")
- George Frideric Handel: Organ Concerto in G minor
- Antonio Vivaldi: Choral Work TBA
- Bryan Johnson: Guitar Concerto [World premiere]
- Michael Paitting, guitar

All concerts are at First Free Methodist Church, except "Holiday."

For more information, call 206-622-5205 or visit our Web site, www.oscss.org.
DONORS

MAESTRO’S CIRCLE
[10,000 or more]
Barbara & Eugene Hilder
Allen & Christine Rickert

COMPOSER’S CIRCLE
[5,000-9,999]
Liesel van Schilden

CONCERTO CIRCLE
[2,500-4,999]
Antofan
Alex & Norma Gugino

Cissi Cugini
Gerald & Betty Kedel

Dinah & Peter Martini

Seattle Office of Arts & Cultural Affairs

CADENZA CIRCLE
[1,100-5,999]
Shanon & Andrew Agnew
Anonymous
Christopher Betch

Jane Blackwell

Boeing Matching

Susan Carpenter & Hal Belzer

Construction Disputes Resolution, Inc

Doug Dugan

Herman Law Firm, LLC

Manchung Ho & Shui Mallek

Kidder, Inc.

Fritz Klein

Benjamin Lee

Dennis & Jean Moore

Jerry R. Rogers, MD

Peter & Elise Schmid

Nancy Shaefer, MD

Ann Thompson

George Walkerstein & Julie Lutz

Ellie Welt

Winter Solutions

David Zagosky & Lindsay Brown

VIAVEC
[500-999]
Anonymous

Boone & Gayle Barker

Paul Benninfield

Charles Brete

Stephen & Petra Carl

William & Donna Lee Cumming

Beatris Dolf

Audrey Don

Ann Erickson

Peter Garbus & Heather MacLaughlin Garbus

Jessie & Joe Johnson

David & Peggy Biltman-Knoke

Jimmy & Ethel Larsen

Dan Lee

Tom Nisbitt & Penny Nichols

Nicoló Black Mosenti & Feig PCLC

Northwest Hyrdonic Heating

Gary Oles

Jonno & Linda Paros

Kemett &

Elizabeth Robertson

Janet & Michael Shovester

Richard & Nancy Tow

Julia Alston & Arthur Thiel

PRESTO [$250-1,499]

Ellen Anderson

Anonymous

Tom & Andrea Barber

David & Julie Blevins

Greg Caprono & Barbara Linde

Ron & Marci Carson

Ralph & Sue Cobb

Michael & Lucy Copus

Deborah Donahue & Randy Apley

John Edwards, MD

Holly Finn

Wallace & Linda Freeze

Philip Griffin

Michael & De Ann Grammont

Jo Hansen

George Huestis & Celeste Eskridge

H. Donald Hawkins

Susan Herring

Ellen Kinsor & Gary Roberts

Robert Keckley & Elizabeth Kennedy

Lorettta & Walter Knowles

Warren & Christine Koons

Arnold & Jill Krausz

William & Ruth Knottke

Ted & Pam Kummer

Theodore Lett & Paul Binzer

Nancy Lewis

Huben Lockee

H. J. Lozier, MD

Mark Letz

Laurie Medoff & David Savage

Stu & Katie Sneeker-Mosser

Donald & Linda Miller

Northwest Hyrdonic Heating, Inc.

Rebecca Parker

Gustav & Claire Raum

Theo Schaad & Barbara

Schaad-Lampert

Friedrich & Ruth Scholz

Paul Schwart

Susan Stephens

Alexander & Jane Stevens

Jeff & Melissa Thirloway

Rebe & David Utsey

David & Patricia Vaterlein

Matthews Wyant & Bonnie Light

ALLEGRO [$100-249]

Stephen & Megan Allen

Thomas & Barb Archbould

Julie & Jamie Batteman

Andrew & Sally Bell

Donald & Ma Bell

Matthew Blackwell

Tom Bingham

Michael & Patricia Charke

William Cohn, MD

W. H. & Helen Dahlgren

Kyla Daffner

Richard & Judy Delio

Robert & Lynne Doherty

Phyllis Frey

Karen Fuller

George Fuller

Foy Grifith

Clifford & Mary Gunnell

Edward Goldstein

N. Michael & Moirence Hansen

Jane Hedgedth

Stephen Heggg

David & Caroline Holmes

Charlotte Hood Rua Howard

Neal & Claire Hollower

Kristin Janneren

Mark & Joyce Jennings

Alan Jones & Eileen Crawford

Roland Juddin

Christopher & Jean-Marie Kent

Paul & Paulette Kuklas

Olga Klein

Jason Kuo

Gerald & Barbara Lahtinen

Robert Leighton

Bob & Eileen Luuk

Jim & Adventures McCoy

Anne Mise

Howard & Audrey Mollie

Christine Moe

Kimberley Okamura

Chad & Ferne Pierce

Susan Plat

Barbara Puddicombe

Lous & Ruth Pritchett

Jean Reel

Hug & Susan Reichenbach

Mary Kay Richter

Ruth Rickert

Ann Roberts

Annie Robertson

Jean Rose

Victoria Rose

H. J. & Lynn Rowland

Roger & Mary Sackett

Jerry & Kja Sams

Richard & Polly Saunders

Eckart & Hildegard Schmidt

Nord Shannon

Ellen Smith

Helio Slochik

William F. Sapor

Jeffrey & Melissa Thruloway

William & Kathleen Trier

Fiter & Tjske van der Meulen

Dennis Van Zandt & Margaret Russell

Anthony & Roselee Warren

Doug & Ingrid Welb

Rob & Lorraine Weltein

Ann Williams

Wood & Helm Wilson

Wilson & Barbara Wyant

Janet Young

PASIONES ($100-99)

Sebald Almend

Roberto Alschuler

James & Elice Apitiz

Theodore & Ruth Beck

Victor Bennett

Andrew Blackwell

Jerry & Joyce Burns

Peter & Heather Cannon

C. R. & Marion Chadwick

Robert & Patricia Charterson

Rod Cumbellick

Vernon & Glenn Cumbellick

John & Patricia Cox

J. A. & Nancy Crim

Tom Dahlstrom

John Dowd

Mary Virginia Dombrowski

Daniel & Kathleen Dow

Laurel Dye

Emily Elston

Del & Mary Jane Elliott

Bryan & Hilary Engbrethten

Dave & Irene Fisher

Josefina & Archimedes Garbes

Sally Jo Gilbert & Vargas

Donald & Rebecca Gutfa

Kristin Hansen

John & Angela Herczog

Peter Hyne

Norman Hollinghead

William & Susan Hudson

Sue & Jonathan Johnson

J. Michael Keil

Arthur & Tiina Krachenberg

Donald & Joyce Leik

Alice Leighon

Gwen Massefield

Dane & Cynthia McCabe

Barbara McHargue

Wayne Meek

Alan & Cheryl Middleton

Ruth Monroe

Lewey & Isaac Naimoaka

Doris & Peter Nitsche

Susan Payne

Michael Podolsk

Dry. Robert & Barbara Pringle

Richard & Joan Rorrd

David Reeves

Lester & Barbara Roberts

David Ross

Lee Rosenthal

John & Ruth Rag

Hans & Lynn Suaz

Gary Sheard

Glenly Shane

George Shatton

Brennon Stankiewick

Kevin & Marie Silk

Charles Simrill & Deborah Glas

Maxine Sinaguro

Marcus & Eugene Sing

Frank Stachnuss

Valerie Ann Taylor

Robert Thompson

Christopher & Sally Trauma

Bill Trausah

Bryan Turner

Germade Vele

Sawel Walsh

Stephen Wilens

Douglas & Susan Woods

GIFTS IN HONOR OF

Wendy Delombe

Anne Roberts Engledahl

Chais & Adriana Engledahl

Sara Hedgith

Zachery Price

Evelard Schmidt

F. W. Schle

Nancy Weckoff

IN MEMORIAM

Diane Anderson

Dorob Emchuck

Rev. Julie Dieters Koch

Reta Shangrow

Roy & Lottte Stehers

IN-HAND CONTRIBUTIONS

Classic KFG FM 98.1

Sapre Corporation

Top Tex Toys

Contributions to OSSCS, a non-profit arts organization, are fully tax-deductible. This list includes gifts received between January 1, 2005 and September 26, 2006. While every effort has been made to ensure a complete and accurate listing of our valued patrons, we apologize for any errors. To report an error or omission, or for more information on becoming a donor, please call 206-682-5288 or send an email to osscs@osscs.org.